Language for God in Patristic Tradition: Wrestling with Biblical Anthropomorphism:

Criticism of myth in the Bible is not a modern problem. Its roots go back to the earliest Christian theologians and before them to ancient Greek and Jewish thinkers. The dilemma posed by texts that ascribe human characteristics and emotions to the divine is a perennial problem and we have much to learn from the ancient attempts to address it. Mark Sheridan provides a theological and historical analysis of the patristic interpretation of Scripture's anthropomorphic
