From The Chinese University Press : Sinologists as Translators in the Seventeenth to Nineteenth Centuries (Asian Translation Traditions) Sinologists as Translators in the Seventeenth to Nineteenth Centuries (Asian Translation Traditions):

This collection deploys archive studies and translation hermeneutics to merge the historical study of sinology with translation research. Focusing on the context of contributions by early Sinologists and their translations of works in Chinese, the essays in this volume ask why certain works were chosen for translation in particular historical moments, how they were interpreted, translated and manipulated, and what influence they had especially in advancing sinology. In About the Author, Lawrence Wang chi Wong is Chairman and Professor of Humanities at the Department of Translation and Director of the Research Centre for Translation, The Chinese University of Hong Kong. His research interests include translation history of China.
